

Black Seed For Blood Sugar

Black Seed has shown promise balancing blood sugar levels in both animals and humans. When more than 50 men and women with high levels of blood sugar took one teaspoon of Black Seed Oil, in divided doses twice daily for a month, 40 experienced significant improvement. In fact, taking Black Seed capsules or oil often allows diabetic to avoid synthetic drugs; however, blood sugar must be monitored by a healthcare professional to prevent sudden changes in glucose levels.*

The following are some excerpts from published scientific reports:

BLACK SEED Increases Immune Function
US Patents Sections, Antiviral Agents Bulletin #5,482,711

BLACK SEED contains valuable fatty acids, for example, Linoleic and Gammalinolen acids that get into the organism. By that it is possible to reach a synthesis of important immune regulating substances derived as from Prostaglandin E1. Linoleic acid stabilizes the cell membranes and Prostaglandin has the effect of inhibiting inflammation. By that the immune reactions are stopped which cause the illness and which otherwise could be the start of many chronic illnesses like acne and hay fever right up to cancer - Dr. Peter Schleicher, Immunologist, Munich Germany.

BLACK SEED proves to have an anti-histamine, anti-oxidant, anti-biotic, anti-mycotic and bronchi-dilating effect - Study of Black Seed Oil on humans, American Scientists.

BLACK SEED is also rich in sterols, especially beta-sitosterol, which is known to have anti-carcinogenic activity - Dr. Michael Tierra, LAC. O.M.D.

BLACK SEED is a valuable source of proteins, carbohydrates, essential fatty acids, vitamins A, B1, B2, C, and niacin, as well as minerals such as calcium, iron, potassium, magnesium, selenium, zinc-
